Hyattstown Man Writes Warren Report Expose

"Whitewash: The Report on the Warren Report" is the title of a new book released today and written by Harold Weisberg, a resident of the Hyattstown area.

The book deals with one of the major events in the history of the United States, if not the world — the assassination of President John F. Kennedy and the official inquiry into it, which is described as wanting and unsatisfactory.

"There can be no doubt that the most serious errors were made. There is doubt this was entirely accidental," Weisberg stated in describing the conditions surrounding the desire to write the book.

The book is restricted entirely to the official evidence and is the result of no private investigations. It comes from thousands of hours of careful study and analysis of the testimony and exhibits in the vast record of 27 large and closely printed volumes, according to the author.

Prior to writing this, his first book, Weisberg was a newspaper and magazine writer, a Senate investigator and an intelligence and political analyst.

His earlier specialties included cartels and economic and political warfare. During the early days of World War II, his personal investigations and writings were widely credited with laying the foundation for the taking over of enemy property and foreign funds controls. His work was of value to the Justice and Treasury Departments, which used the proofs he developed in legal and other actions against Nazis and Nazi fronts.

During the Kennedy administration, his "Geese for Peace" project got the Peace Corps its first good publicity. This was an effort, later repeated with the International Voluntary Services, to foster more basic agricultural help for the newly emerging lands.

With his wife and an assortment of domestic animals, including tamed wild geese, he lives on a small farm just outside of Hyattstown. He is an expert on waterfowl, which he studies and raises as a hobb,y and is presently working on several books about them.
